Zebbler on Marathon hoax, Mooninite scare

Bold Bostonians. As part of Metro's ongoing Q&A series featuring intriguing people in Boston, we sat down with 34-year-old Belarus-born artist Peter Berdovsky.

Seven years after his public art triggered a citywide bomb scare, Boston artist Peter Berdovsky, known professionally as Zebbler, has moved past the promotional stunt gone-wrong and is optimistic about the city's awakening art scene.

Do you consider what Kayvon Edson did on the Boston Marathon bombing anniversary to be performance art?
I consider what [Edson] did incredibly disrespectful to the spirit of mourning and sense of profound community and loss that the city of Boston was experiencing on the day of the anniversary. His actions to me are repulsive and similar to that of Westboro Baptist Church members holding up signs about [expletive] going to hell at soldiers' funerals.

Do you think you'll always be known as the Mooninite artist?
I don't really think so. I am a fairly ambitious individual, and I'm certainly hoping to get more famous for my art and performances. It's getting close; after six years of touring the U.S., more and more people know me as "Zebbler: that guy that does incredible visual performances and installations."

"We will pave the way for technology, innovation and art to be a big part of this growing city. We are here to stay."
Berdovsky

Were you caught off guard by the public's reaction at the time?
I was totally caught off guard. I was doing a job for the Cartoon Network. I figured a big company like that would know what they were doing. They totally did, too, just not in the way I expected. They bailed themselves out with a $2 million donation to the city in exchange for all charges being dropped and left me and my friend Sean Stevens to be dragged through the court system as scapegoats. It was a great lesson in politics though. I truly believe that.

How was your First Night 2014 installation received?
Really well; people had big smiles on their faces watching the library transformed to tell the visual history of this city. It meant a lot to me to do this. I felt like I could finally give something back to the people who raised me and welcomed me.

Can artists truly feel comfortable pushing the envelope in Boston?
I think we're one of the better cities for that. Freedom of expression is respected here. And public art is starting to catch on. It's still hard for visual artists. ...But we are waking up.

Investigation. Teen shot outside South End party

A teenager is fighting for his life after being shot outside of a South End party early Sunday. Boston police said officers were called to 5 Castle Court at about 1:50 a.m., after a report that a person had been shot.

When officers arrived, they found the teen shot outside of a party near the address. The 17-year-old was suffering from a life-threatening gunshot wound and was rushed to Boston Medical Center.

Detectives are investigating. There was no information about arrests as of Sunday evening. Anyone with information can call 617-343-4470.

Solar-powered benches take root in Hub parks

A new type of bench is taking root in Boston parks, giving people the chance to recharge their legs and their phones.

Soofa, as the bench is called, is a solar-powered outdoor charging station from the MIT Media Lab spin-off firm Changing Environments.

The benches are being installed in various parks and green spaces in Boston over the next week, including Titus Sparrow Park in the South End, the Boston Common and the Rose Kennedy Greenway, the city recently announced. METRO

Abortion

Supreme Court strikes down buffer-zone law

The Supreme Court on Thursday unanimously voided the state's 7-year-old law that created a 35-foot buffer zone outside abortion clinics on the grounds that it violated protestors' right to free speech.

Buffer zone opponents argued that the space prohibited pro-life demonstrators from speaking to women about abortion alternatives, while clinicians said the zone was meant to protect against harassment and violence.

"A woman seeking reproductive health care should not be harassed, judged or shamed," Boston Mayor Martin Walsh said of the ruling.

"I will do everything in my power to ensure the safety of the women seeking care and the staff that work at these facilities."

Casino issue. Gaming panel to weigh Walsh's delay request this week

The state's gaming commission will this week hear arguments concerning Mayor Marty Walsh's attempt to delay the awarding of a resort casino license to one of two projects bordering Boston.

The Massachusetts Gaming Commission is scheduled to meet Wednesday in Charlestown to take up the matter and has invited representatives form Boston, Everett, Revere, Mohegan Sun and Wynn Resorts to speak on the issue.

Walsh's law office submitted a letter to the commission last week, just days after the state's highest court ruled that voters could decide a November ballot question that seeks to overturn the 2011 expanded gaming law.

"To prevent the needless expenditure of additional time, money and effort by the city of Boston, at a time when the future of casino gambling in Massachusetts is uncertain, the city respectfully requests that the gaming commission stay all proceedings before it concerning the issuance of a … license," said Eugene O'Flaherty, the city's attorney, in the letter.

Mohegan Sun is proposing a resort casino in Revere at Suffolk Downs and Wynn is pitching one for Everett.

Revere Mayor Dan Rizzo said he respects Walsh but sees no reason for a delay.

"A time line has been announced, and they should stick with it. It's also worth noting that two other licenses have been granted with full knowledge that there could be a ballot question — this is no different," Rizzo said in a statement. "Mohegan Sun has reached 11 other surrounding community agreements. I can see no reason for further delays." MICHAEL NAUGHTON

Casino time line

The gaming commission ruled last month against Boston's argument that it is a host community to both the Mohegan Sun and Wynn proposals. The city must now secure a surrounding community agreement.

- The Greater Boston resort casino license is expected to be awarded in August or September, months after an original estimate.

Marathon bombing

Jury selection begins in trial of Tsarnaev friend

Jury selection will begin today for a friend of suspected Boston Marathon bomber Dzhokhar Tsarnaev, Azamat Tazhayakov, who is accused of impeding the investigation into the deadly bombing.

A pool of hundreds of potential jurors will be screened about their attitudes about Tsarnaev, Muslims and the attack itself in order to give Tazhayakov a fair trial.

A proposed juror questionnaire asks, "Were you, a family member or a close friend impacted in ANY way (physically, emotionally or mentally) by the Boston Marathon bombing?"

Jurors are also asked if they or anyone close to them has ever expressed an opinion about the guilt or innocence of Tsarnaev and his friends.

Opening statements in Tazhayakov's trial are expected to begin on July 7. Three others have also been charged with impeding the investigation and are scheduled for trial at later dates. MORGAN ROUSSEAU

Obama seeks $2 billion from Congress to tackle child migration crisis

Talks. John Kerry will be visiting Central America this week and meeting with leaders in Panama.

The request will mark a major step in Obama's attempt to control a chaotic scene on the U.S. border with Mexico where tens of thousands of children have crossed without their parents. / GETTY IMAGES

President Barack Obama will ask Congress for more than $2 billion to deal with the surge in unaccompanied children from Central America flooding into the United States along its southern border.

Obama will make the request for emergency funding in a letter on Monday, asking Congress to act when it returns from a holiday recess on July 7, a White House official said on Sunday.

U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry will travel to Central America this week for a visit that will include the inauguration of Panama's new president on July 1 and that is expected to include meetings on the crisis with Central American leaders.

In addition, Obama will seek greater authority for U.S. immigration officials to speed up the deportation of children caught crossing from countries such as Guatemala, Honduras and El Salvador, the official said.

The official said Obama will also request a "sustained border security surge through enhanced domestic enforcement," along with an increase in immigration judges to more speedily adjudicate the cases of recent border crossers.

Obama will step up efforts with Central American countries to repatriate migrants who are returned to their home countries and address the root causes of migration. And, the official said, he will seek "the resources necessary to appropriately detain, process and care for children and adults." REUTERS

1 Kelly Osbourne gets her head tattooed

If you thought that Kelly Osbourne's days as a wild child were over, you thought wrong. She might have gotten her act together and everything, but this weekend the daughter of Ozzy Osbourne got her head tattooed. Yup, you don't need glasses. SHE REALLY GOT HER HEAD TATTOOED! On her Instagram, she posted several photos of the process and a final one showing the result. The tattoo is on the side of her head and reads "Stories...". Hmm, we guess it could be worse (as in, it could have been on her forehead), but we still don't think it's pretty. Good thing her hair will grown out at some point, right?

2 Freeman: 'Sherlock' will return — in a year and a half

Few shows have given viewers as much with so little as the BBC's "Sherlock." Viewers perpetually are left wondering whether this is the last time they will get any more. But Martin Freeman, who plays Dr. John Watson, dropped the first hint of what's to come for the show since its third season aired in January. In an interview with The Telegraph, Freeman said "Sherlock" will resume filming early next year for what will likely be a 2015 special. That wasn't all: His real-life partner, Amanda Abbington, joined the series this year as Watson's wife, Mary Morstan. If you don't know your Holmes canon, stop reading now. "While we play fast and loose with the original stories, we generally follow the trajectory of what [Arthur] Conan Doyle did," Freeman said. EVA KIS

3 Justin Bieber and Chris Brown battle it out

Two of the world's most (in) famous singers duked it out on the basketball court Saturday. Justin Bieber and Chris Brown were playing at the BET Celebrity Basketball Game in LA on opposite teams, but luckily that didn't make them enemies. The two had time to do some sweaty posing for the cameras after the game. Snoop Dogg (or Snoop Lion, or whatever he's called these days) was also participating in the game on Brown's team. No word on who won, but we hear that both Bieber and Brown showed off some mad basketball skills, while Snoop Dog busted a few hilarious dance moves.

Justin joins Beyonce and Jay-Z — sort of

In other Bieber-related news (there is always so much to choose from), the singer made a small appearance on Beyonce and Jay-Z's "On The Run" tour during the weekend. Actually, it was only his mug shot that did. While Jay-Z performed "H to the Izzo," a whole bunch of celebrity mug shots were shown in the background. At the end of the performance Beyonce said, referring to the mug shots, "Even the greatest can fall." Does this mean Beyonce and Jay-Z think Justin Bieber is great?!

A nicer Big Jim

Interview. Dean Norris' "Under the Dome" character is lightening up.

Dean Norris picked one heck of a series to follow up "Breaking Bad." In "Under the Dome," Norris takes on the dastardly role of local politico Big Jim in the series based on the novel by Stephen King. The choice certainly seems to be working out for him: The series, a smash hit last summer, returns for another season chronicling a mysteriously cut-off town. Here, Norris lets us in on what to expect this year.

On where we find Big Jim at the start of the season: "Big Jim thinks he knows what's best for the town, and he thinks he's inspired by the dome to do what he does. ... What happens in the first episode is that he comes to an awakening. He reevaluates his position and his kind of personal trajectory and decides that maybe a different kind of Big Jim is required to survive under the dome. Whether that turns out to be true is what we'll find out as the season goes on. One of the things that Big Jim is trying to deal with is seeing if there is enough food for everybody, if there is enough water for everybody and what resources are left for us to survive under the dome."

On whether Big Jim might actually be lightening up a little bit this season: "Actually, I think so. One thing we're talking about this year is including some redemption for Big Jim. It's actually in the first episode that he has a 'come to God' moment where he believes that maybe his purpose in life shouldn't be to be so nasty. And that's a story arc that continues throughout the season: whether he has a higher purpose — a greater purpose — other than just killing people and being mean to his son."

So King-ian

On Stephen King writing the first new episode:

"The first episode is so Stephen King-ian, and part of it is that almost in the midst of the kind of most horrifying and tragic elements, there are these little lines that are humorous. It was cool to see that because it's in his books [so] it was so cool to see it in the script, too. I think you'll see in that first episode that there are moments where Big Jim maybe sees ghosts or they may be whatever they are. ... It's funny to see Big Jim have to squirm."

Q&A. John Carney makes another 'stealth musical' with 'Begin Again'

Seven years ago, Irish musician-turned-filmmaker John Carney watched his little film — "Once," starring Glen Hansard as a street musician — blossom into a phenomenon. He has returned to the genre and to New York City with "Begin Again," which concerns an A&R guy (Mark Ruffalo) who is working on a new kind of record with a shy musician (Keira Knightley).

Why did you want to return to the genre?
The story is what appealed to me. I don't really sit down thinking something should be a musical.

Like 'Once,' this isn't a traditional musical. It's realistic, and the songs rise organically from the narrative.
They're stealth musicals, aren't they? They not like Broadway musicals where the dialogue is there to join the dots between songs. It's the other way around.

One thing it brings up is, how do musicians these days actually make a living?
That's a huge question and one that in this film is just asked, as opposed to answered. I would not make any great claims to answering that question. It's quite a sensitive issue for a lot of artists I know. A lot of people in this field feel they're being taken advantage of, or it's assumed their work should be done for free. If a plumber comes to your house to fix your toilet, you have to pay him.

You also focus on an A&R guy, who is not treated like a greed monster.
I felt like exploring what it's like for someone for whom this business was their reason to live. The discovery of new music is like the discovery of new lands. When you see an A&R man dragging around their band, you can see someone who looks like they've discovered an island.

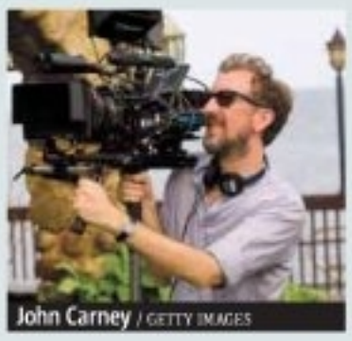
Do your thing

What is it like making a movie about musicians with actors who aren't primarily musicians?



John Carney / GETTY IMAGES

It's nice to mix it up a little bit. Sometimes it's nice to have an actor who's singing or a singer who's acting and not have everybody doing what they're comfortable doing. Keira was outside her comfort zone having to perform a song or play the guitar. While Adam [Levine], who is completely comfortable with that side of things — you couldn't stop him from singing or playing — was more nervous around the acting side of things. MATT PRIGGE

Find and keep a career mentor

Personal relationships are more important than ever in the job world.

Navigating the world of business can be tough — especially when you're in the early stages of your career. Finding a mentor can be the key to success. Enter the Every Day Connect campaign, which is sponsored by Fairfield Inn and Suites as a way to support the connections between young professionals and their mentors. "I think mentorship is important to everyone, but a lot of people are afraid to reach out," says Fairfield Inn's Vice President of Global Brand Management Shruti Buckley.

A Fairfield survey reveals that 66 percent of those surveyed said personal relationships have helped their careers. We talked to four entrepreneurs named to the Forbes "30 under 30" list for their suggestions on how foster a strong mentoring network.

One last tip

You should be working to help your mentor, too

Mentoring isn't a one-way street. Mark Arnoldy is the Executive Director of Nyaya Health, which works to bring healthcare to remote parts of Nepal. He says younger workers shouldn't discount their talents. "If you are sincere in your generosity, great things will come your way and 'networking' can be a source of joy rather than something slimy and shallow," he says.

Don't be afraid to reach out

If you are shy about approaching someone in your field, don't be. Fairfield's survey reveals that 77 percent of employed adults said they were willing to help new grads find work. But it's important that young people show that they are serious. "I didn't go out looking for mentors," says Meg Gill, an executive with Golden Road Brewing. "I went out looking to learn. A lot of people don't just let someone come up to them, so you have to be passionate about something."

Visit Metro.us for a mentorship infographic.

Don't think of it as formally finding a 'mentor'

Kane Sarhan, who co-founded @Enstitute, a program that matches young people with entrepreneurial apprenticeships, says the best mentoring relationships come about organically. "We find with a lot of our students, mentors just develop naturally once you find someone you connect with," he says. "Those really strong personal relationships are long lasting."

Find someone you can bounce ideas off of

"It's always good to have different people, opinions and perspectives around," explains Edun Full, the creator of SunSaluter, a device that makes solar panels more efficient. Full says her mentor has been instrumental in the early growth of her company. "Just talking things through and weighing the pros and cons was really key to making the right decisions," she says.

Be persistent without being annoying

Full also stresses that you shouldn't give up if there is a particular person you want to connect with. "If someone doesn't respond to your email [right away], there are so many reasons why," she points out.

At the same time, remember to respect your mentor's time. "Be humble and assertive, but not necessarily aggressive," says Gill.

Let your mentor know the impact he or she has had Always remember to let your mentors and advisers know that you appreciate them. "I'm constantly showing gratitude toward my mentors," says Sarhan. "A lot of times, one problem with my generation is the lack of humility," says the 26-year-old. He says that doing things as simple as sending thank-you cards, birthday presents and just calling to catch up can go a long way.

Horoscope

♋ Cancer | June 21-July 22. Don't take chances with your money. Beware of someone trying to convince you to change careers. Unless you have another position available, stay put.

♌ Leo | July 23-Aug. 22. You will have a terrific day if you follow your intuition and take action. Change will be good, and the rewards for following through and doing your own thing will be satisfying.

♍ Virgo | Aug. 23-Sept. 22. Proceed with caution. Your professional integrity may be questioned if you appear to be uncertain. Don't be manipulated by someone trying to put the blame on you.

♎ Libra | Sept. 23-Oct. 22. It's time for a celebration. Gather your friends and family, and have everyone pitch in to make your event more enjoyable. If you have someone in your life you'd like to get to know better, be sure to invite him or her.

♏ Scorpio | Oct. 23-Nov. 21. You may be feeling insecure, but that's no reason to share your secrets. Your plans cannot be sabotaged if you keep them to yourself. Play it safe.

♐ Sagittarius | Nov. 22-Dec. 21. You will gain a lot of knowledge from someone who comes from a different background. Open your eyes and mind to new subjects.

♑ Capricorn | Dec. 22-Jan. 20. Avoid getting into financial trouble by handling your own money matters. Staying in control of your investments will give you greater opportunity to make your money work.

♒ Aquarius | Jan. 21-Feb. 18. Show some consideration to the ones you love. Even if your day is not going as planned, it isn't fair to take out your frustration on those around you.

♓ Pisces | Feb. 19-March 20. Don't sit idle when you should be active. Get together with friends for some outdoor fun. Set aside some time to spend a special evening with someone.

♈ Aries | March 21-April 20. Once in a while, it's good to toot your own horn. The more self-promotion you do, the easier it will be to meet someone who can help you get to the next level.

♉ Taurus | April 21-May 21. If you don't want to deal with regret, show a little restraint. Making assumptions or jumping to conclusions before you have all the details will make you look bad.

♊ Gemini | May 22-June 20. Get out and socialize. Whatever the situation, you will enjoy being the center of attention. A change of plans will turn out to be in your favor. Go with the flow. BERNICE BEDE OSOL

Columnist's equal measures a pleasure

Re: 'Tom Foreman just isn't very funny' (Metro, June 24) Thank you, Metro, for Tom Foreman. Every time I see his column I feel encouraged and anticipate an intelligent, courageous, informative and acute commentary, which invariably reveals the pitfalls of massive trends and soothes my unspoken worries. It is heart-rending to watch a horde of lemurs jump to their deaths just because the majority "has it." I believe one reason why letter writer Jonathan Hecht deems, oh so assuredly, Foreman unwitty is that the witticism is of the Irish bull type: It turns onto himself.

Mr. Foreman is too compassionate to condemn. He detects and highlights in others the danger he recognizes as innate in each one us, including himself: one that must end in massive, gleeful suicide.

Thank you, Metro, for a choice of columnists that represent all points of view.

Give Congress an inch, and it'll take all your rights

Re: 'Guns make some safer' (Metro, June 26-29) There is no such thing as reasonable or sensible gun legislation when lawmakers are focused on restricting or denying Second Amendment rights to law-abiding citizens. The majority of gun laws in this country are aimed at law-abiding gun owners and do nothing to address the issues involving criminal use of firearms. Gun owners have learned that legislators cannot be trusted to do the right thing. As soon as one right is compromised, the lawmakers come back for more.

Sox-Cubs tangle at Fenway

For the second time in four seasons, the Chicago Cubs will play a series at Fenway Park, beginning Monday (7 p.m., NESN) when Chicago pits Jake Arrieta (4-1, 2.05 ERA) against Jake Peavy (1-6, 4.93 ERA).

2014 World Cup

Altidore's status still unclear

U.S. head coach Jurgen Klinsmann would not say for sure this past weekend whether injured star striker Jozy Altidore would be available for Tuesday's game against Belgium (4 p.m., ESPN), but remained "hopeful."

"Every day is a big step forward with Jozy," Klinsmann said. "We are optimistic we'll have him be a part of the Belgium game."

The forward did not participate in soccer-related activities at practice Saturday, according to reports, and was simply seen jogging during the session.

Klinsmann may opt not to start Altidore Tuesday but have him available off the bench. MATT BURKE

France, Germany both looking to advance Monday

France will get Monday's World Cup action in Brazil underway when it squares off with Nigeria (12 p.m., ESPN). The French were 2-0-1 in group play, drawing their last match last Wednesday against Ecuador, 0-0.

Germany, fresh off its 1-0 Group G-winning victory over the United States last Thursday, will take on Algeria for the right to advance to the quarterfinals. The Germans were 2-0-1 in group play, blanking Portugal, 4-0, before drawing with Ghana, 2-2, in their second contest. MATT BURKE

Optimism now guarded with Celtics' roster

NBA. The presence of Marcus Smart may not lead to the trading of Rajon Rondo just yet.

When Adam Silver read aloud the name of "Marcus Smart" at the NBA Draft last week, many immediately predicted that Rajon Rondo would be on the next Amtrak out of South Station. While Rondo could still absolutely be traded between now and July 1, 2015 — the day his current contract with the Celtics comes to an end — it shouldn't be ruled out that the Celtics will at least experiment with the bruising Smart and the quirky Rondo on the floor at the same time in 2014-15.

Danny Ainge, Wyc Grousbeck and Brad Stevens have all, of course, already said that Smart and Rondo could play together. Do they all truly believe that? Who knows for sure, but Ainge is certainly one who isn't afraid to think outside the box.

When Ainge was head coach of the Phoenix Suns in the late 1990s, he had a team that thrived with three and sometimes four guards on the floor at the same time. Jason Kidd, Kevin Johnson, Steve Nash and Rex Chapman (three of four described as traditional "point guards") would often drive opposing teams nuts with their frenzied, unorthodox style of play — and it resulted in 56 victories that season for Ainge's Suns.

Smart is considered a relatively poor shooter, and when you add in the fact that the Celtics already have dreadful numbers from the outside (tied for 27th in the league in 3-point field goal percentage at .333 in 2013-14), it makes one wonder if the C's can keep pace with playoff teams. For instance, the Spurs were first in 3-point field goal percentage in 2013-14.

The drafting of Kentucky swingman James Young should help shooting matters and Avery Bradley has shown that he is at least capable of knocking down mid-range jumpers and corner 3-pointers. But when Smart and Rondo are on the floor at the same time, one can bet that defenses will sag to the basket.

By the numbers

The Celtics were tied with the Kings for 27th in the NBA in 3-point field goal percentage last season, shooting at a poor .333 percent clip.
